Home From Work

The front door to Steve Harrington's house slammed. He knew it wasn't his parents, since to put it very simply they literally were never home. Probably wouldn't be for at least three more weeks. He wasn't lonely. Anyway.

Whoever just came in was stomping around.

"STEVE I'VE HAD A HELL OF A DAY. YOU BETTER GET HARD FAST, BECAUSE I'M GONNA RIDE THAT DICK LIKE I'M MAD AT IT."

Billy Hargrove walked into the living room, looking horny and angry, and then--he stopped.

Steve stared at him. And what's even worse was that the kids stared at him.

"...well shit."

"Guess now's as good a time as ever to say we're dating," said Steve.

"Uh--"

Steve gave him a look. "We're dating." He didn't have to give a bunch of middle schoolers all of the details.

There was another long moment of just silence before:

"...I knew it." Max smirked.
